Rocky Mountain College's Native American Outreach & Programming hosted the Native Science Fellows on Thursday, March 21 in the Great Room of Prescott Hall. Hopa Mountain, which runs Native Science Fellows, invests in rural and tribal citizen leaders who are improving their communities through education, ecological health, and economic development. The Native Science Fellows is open to Native American and Latino students currently attending a four-year college in Montana while pursuing an undergraduate or graduate degree in select sciences. "Hosting Native Science Fellows is an honor for Rocky's Native American Outreach and Programming because it's an opportunity to showcase Indigenous scholars from across Montana," said Coordinator of Native American Outreach and Programming, Misty Kuhl.
